Professor Jonas Pranas Aleksa (1879-1955) was one of the most famous leaders of the agrarian sector in the independent Lithuania (1920-1940) and the founder of the agrarian economy science. The comprehensive analysis shows J. P. Aleksa public and scientific activities can be very effectively adapted for the creation of modern rural development strategy and strengthening of democracy in the state public administration. Also, the J. P. Aleksa personality itself becomes a bright example for future generations, how to serve to the native country and to the universal goodness. Unshakeable idealism, integrity and honesty, faith in human progress are the qualities, which will enable to choose the most valuable trends of life strategy for us and for our future generations.
