INVITATION

Institute of Regional Development of Šiauliai Academy of Vilnius University and partners kindly invite scientists, researchers and practitioners to take the part in the international interdisciplinary scientific conference, which is dedicated to the 146th birth and 100th death anniversaries of Professor Jonas Pranas Aleksa. Participants will share insights from newest researches and the practice on the importance of evidence and science for policy making, while developing smart and sustainable regions. The conference will include interdisciplinary discussions in such fields as public governance, social policy, economics, management, etc. This year, a separate European Regional Studies Association (ERSA) Baltic section working group will be organised, focusing on the resilience and competitiveness of regions in the digital transformation era.

Professor Jonas Pranas Aleksa (1879-1955) was one of the most famous leaders of the agrarian sector in the independent Lithuania (1920-1940) and the founder of the agrarian economy science. J. P. Aleksa's public and scientific activities were effectively adapted for the strengthening of democracy in the state public administration and the creation of modern rural development strategy. Also, the J. P. Aleksa personality itself becomes is a bright example for future generations, how to serve to the native country and to the universal goodness. This year we remember his 146th birth and 70th death anniversaries.
